Jefferson turnout 22.67% for delayed primary

BY MARK CAMPBELL

Both County Council At-Large incumbents garnered enough votes Tuesday to advance to the November general election, but neither was the top vote-getter in a five-way race for three spots on the Republican ticket in what was the only contested office on a caronavirus-delayed June primary in Jefferson County.

Gary Copeland got the most votes at 1,509 while incumbents Pam Crozier was second with 1,505 and Heather Traylor Foy fended off Michael T. Scott 1,463 to 1,455 for the final spot on the fall ballot as Charles Johnson finished fifth with 955 votes. Longtime incumbent Joe Craig opted not to seek another term.

There are “provisional ballots” from Tuesday that will be reviewed at the next Board of Elections meeting on June 12, but whether those ballots will be allowed or even be enough to impact any outcomes is not known at this time.

Meanwhile, Copeland, Crozier and Foy will wait to see if the Democrats mount a challenge in November since no candidates from that party were entered in the primary.

In fact, the only other contested local races were for spots as party convention delegates but there were a couple of races for U.S. Congress and State Representative as 22.67% of the registered voters exercised their right with 3,055 of those showing up at the polls on election day, 1,363 voting by paper write-in and 454 by walk-in absentee or pre-voting.

In what would have been a presidential primary if the nomination for either party was still in suspense, GOP incumbent Donald Trump was named on 2,574 ballots to 170 for Bill Weld in Jefferson County and presumptive Democratic challenger, former Vice President Joe Biden, received 1,528 votes to 202 by Vermont U.S. Sen. Bernie Sanders, 67 by South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg and 66 by Massachusetts U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Warren. No other Democratic candidate received more than 35 votes.

With at least 2,744 Republicans and 1,971 Democrats voting, incumbent Gov. Eric Holcomb received 2,609 votes locally while Democratic challenger Woodrow Myers received 1,612 as both were unopposed in the primary.

Incumbent U.S. Sixth District Rep. Greg Pence outpolled GOP challenger Mike Campbell 2,326 to 362 locally enroute to winning the GOP nomination, and Democrat Jeannine Lee Lake received 1,118 votes to 380 by Barry Welsh and 268 by George T. Holland among Democrats en route to winning the party nomination heading to November.

Carrollton man arrested after confrontation with protesters

Local residents protesting against nationwide police brutality and violence against black citizens displayed signs along Highland Avenue at the Carroll County Courthouse on Monday evening.

Carrollton Police Chief Mike Willhoite and Carroll County Sheriff Ryan Gosser and several of their officers kept watch during a protest on the Carroll County Courthouse Square in Carrollton.

BY COLLIN OVERTON

An otherwise peaceful protest against nationwide police brutality turned ugly in Carrollton Monday night, after a man was arrested for swerving his vehicle toward a group of protesters near the Carroll County Courthouse.

Peter Piercy

The national protest movement over police brutality reached downtown Carrollton for a few hours Monday when 30-40 young protesters and a few middle-aged adults carried signs, led chants and marched around downtown to voice their solidarity from 7 p.m. to about 9:30 p.m.

Protests have taken place in nearly every major U.S. city over the state of police violence against black citizens following the killing of George Floyd, a Minneapolis man whose death went viral last week when a video surfaced showing officer Derek Chauvin kneeling on his neck with Floyd deprived of oxygen leading to his death.

Citizens in Louisville have rioted for nearly a week over police brutality and the March 13 killing of Breonna Taylor, a black Louisville EMS technician who was shot to death in her apartment by Louisville Metro Police Department officers serving a no-knock warrant at the wrong address.

Monday’s protest in Carrollton was not over law enforcement in Carroll County, but systemic racism nationwide, resident and protester Joshua Brown said.

“Carroll County is not the problem at all. I’ve grown up here my entire life and I’ve never had any problems with the police here. This isn’t a Carroll County thing, this isn’t a Louisville thing, this isn’t a Minneapolis thing, this is an American thing. This protest, this movement is worldwide right now,” Brown said.

German native finds calling in cleaning up Trimble County

BY COLLIN OVERTON

Michaela Dziedzic’s job is all about trash, people and everything in between.

Since becoming solid waste coordinator for Trimble County last September, Dziedzic has uncovered several massive illegal dumps and led the charge for a countywide cleanup. But growing up in Kaufering, Germany, Dziedzic had never planned to be where she is now.

She had hoped to run a business growing up, having obtained an associate-level degree at age 18 from an internship program where she operated a butcher shop, which is common for students who don’t go to traditional college in Germany, Dziedzic said.

It wasn’t until she met a U.S. soldier stationed in Augsburg on a double date, around the time of Operation Desert Storm, that her life took a drastic change in direction. Pregnant with her first child, a boy, but no longer seeing his father, Dziedzic and the soldier began dating and were married by the time his deployment was over. She gave birth to her son around that time in Landsberg am Lech.

After Desert Storm, Dziedzic left home at age 19 and moved with her new husband and infant son to a mobile home in Brandenburg, Kentucky. She barely understood a word of English; her only reference before then was a translation book he husband sent to her while on deployment.

She eventually picked up the language through daily exposure and American TV shows, she said.

“Luckily, it’s a lot easier to understand English than it is speak it,” Dziedzic said.

While her marriage didn’t last, her residency in the U.S. did. After having a daughter and divorcing after 10 years, Dziedzic spent the years after working full-time and pursuing an education and U.S. citizenship while raising two kids in Kentucky with stops in Leitchfield, Radcliff and Clarkson southwest of Louisville.

For 21 years she was an asset protection officer for Walmart stores in Louisville, La Grange and several other Kentucky communities, sometimes in rough neighborhoods where she dealt

“I’m just doing my part. I’ve got little cousins out here, I want to come out and make sure they’re safe, make sure that they’re looked after and make sure that they’re doing things the right way.”

Brown was one of the first protesters to arrive at around 7 p.m. carrying a sign that read “BLM.” Groups of mostly high-school-aged kids trickled in during the following minutes and held signs that read “MLK got killed for dreaming and now I can’t sleep” and “Black Lives Matter,” among others.

For several minutes the group stood on Main Street led chants of “Black Lives Matter,” before marching around the courthouse block and then to other areas of downtown. Motorists driving by the courthouse honked, waved and yelled support or disapproval.

Bystanders watched the protest from their cars, balconies and a gas station across Highland Avenue from the courthouse. A few could be seen taking videos of the march with their phones and posting on social media platforms.

“I think they’re doing it very respectfully, so much better than Louisville and surrounding places,” said Shellaine Wyman, who was watching from her car in the Bank of America parking lot across the street.

Interactions with other people were mostly friendly for the first hour. But tempers flared around Protesters walk around the Carroll County Courthouse square carrying signs Monday evening.

7:45 p.m. when a counter-protester, Cody Curtin, approached the group carrying a sign that read “We have good cops” and began chanting “all lives matter,” rhetoric often used against the Black Lives Matter movement.

“The police in this town are not the problem,” he yelled as protesters flanked him and yelled back.

For several minutes he argued with the group, saying he was half-Filipino and that he, too had encountered systemic racism, but not from local police. After a few minutes of back and forth over police brutality and the meaning of “all lives matter,” the arguments stopped. Curtin then stood on Main Street for about half an hour holding his sign.

“I just want to remind people that there are still good cops. It’s not every single cop, not every single day, not every single precinct,” said Curtin, who said he was a former corrections officer in La Grange, Kentucky. “I dealt with people of all colors, I treated everybody equally. I tried to be a good cop. I know there’s just as many people on the thin blue line that are upset about what happened as there are on the other side of the line.”

Curtin said more actions are already being taken against violent officers and deemed the protests unnecessary at this point.

“... This isn’t going to happen anymore. This isn’t going to happen here. These protests can stop because we’ve got the guy, we can make a change. They can change the policy, they can change the way police are vetted or what their qualifications will be — if they have so many incidents they can cut them loose now. They’re firing people for every infraction at this point. Change is being made, progress is being made. And if we remember we have good cops, we can continue to make change.”

Officers with the Carrollton Police Department and Carroll County Sheriff’s Office stood by on the courthouse lawn to monitor the situation. They knew about the protest after plans appeared on the social media app Snapchat, Carrollton Police Chief Mike Willhoite said. The City of Carrollton posted a notice on Facebook around 5 p.m. notifying the public about the event.

“This group has the right to protest and they have done it in a respectful and responsible way, to try and get their thoughts and their messages out to the people that are passing by. They’ve drawn a crowd that’s watched them and that’s what living in this country is all about,” Willhoite said.

“...We’re going to allow people to voice their opinions, but we will not tolerate anything that turns physical, and/or any kind of property destruction. That is when we’ll step in, when there’s the opportunity that something physically violent is going to happen.”

However, at about 9:30 p.m., Carrollton resident Peter Piercy, 39, pulled into the parking lot next to the courthouse and “swerved his vehicle” toward the group in a fit of rage, nearly hitting them, said Willhoite. Piercy exited the vehicle and began shouting at the protesters enough for officers to arrest him on charges of disorderly conduct. He was taken to Carroll County Regional Detention Center and released at 8:23 a.m. Tuesday on an own recognizance bond.

Suspects charged with

Class D felonies or lower in Kentucky are released on own recognizance due to the COVID-19 pandemic, said Lisa Kyle, Carroll County Chief Deputy and Assistant Jailor.

The incident is still under investigation by the Carrollton Police Department, said Willhoite, adding that the department was receiving indications of a second protest rally on Wednesday night.

Tri-Cities postponement leaves Miss Madison team scrambling

BY DAVID CAMPBELL

The Tri-City Water Follies Board of Directors have voted to postpone this year's event to a later date, all but ending the 2020 H1 Unlimited Hydroplane Series before it ever got started.

The Water Follies Board made the decision on Monday night. Unlike the other three H1 races that have canceled events this season, Tri-Cities has kept open the option of holding the race later in the year but no makeup date was announced.

"This decision was not made lightly and was reached after much discussion and consultation with local leaders. With the available Safe Start Washington information, the board members voted to postpone," Kathy Powell, event director, said in a statement. "We have decided that due to the current COVID-19 policies it is not feasible to have an event on the last weekend of July in 2020. We are hoping to be able to hold the event later in the year, and would like to thank all of our fans, volunteers, partners, and sponsors for their support and flexibility during this difficult time."

Tri-Cities follows in the footsteps of Madison, Indiana, Seattle, and Guntersville, Alabama in postponing or canceling H1 events. Only the season-ending race in San Diego, which is contested in mid-September, is still on the 2020 schedule. A decision on that race is expected in the coming weeks.

For Miss Madison Racing President Charlie Grooms, Monday's announcement was not unexpected. But that doesn't make it any easier to accept.

"It's like a sucker punch for sure," Grooms said of the cancellations. "But like any sucker punch, you get up, take a deep breath and figure out what to do next."

This season was set up to be one of the most interesting in the 59-year history of the Miss Madison team. Jimmy Shane and the U-1 Miss HomeStreet/Miss Madison entered the campaign as the defending National High Points Champions and a second Miss Madison Racing boat, the U-91 Goodman Real Estate driven by Jeff Bernard, was expected to compete the entire season.

But with the season essentially over, the Miss Madison Team is now left to figure out how to take care of its two named sponsors without any races in which to compete.

"We're going to go back and regroup," said Grooms, who has been with the team in some capacity since the late 1970s. "I have spoken to both of our sponsors and they fully understand what the situation is. We still want to go out and represent our city and our sponsors and we now have to figure out the best way to do that."

One option, Grooms said, is to look at existing sites that are still planning on holding events, albeit in the lower classes. Owensboro, Kentucky, which is scheduled to run a grand prix race in mid-August, is a possible destination for an exhibition while Grooms has said he has been talking with officials in San Diego about what to do for that race site. But so far, everything is still in the early stages of discussions.

"The important thing for us is to get the boats in front of people, whether that is on the water or as a display," Grooms said. "Obviously, we want to help out the (Madison) Regatta any way that we can and there are things that we can do, but we're still in the planning stages. Right now, everything is on the table."

Seattle-based HomeStreet Bank is entering its fifth season as sponsor of the team's primary boat and Grooms said that relationship remains healthy. He has had several discussions with HomeStreet Bank CEO Mark Mason about strategies for this "lost" season.

"Mark and HomeStreet are still very much behind us," Grooms said. "In the past, we've had displays at Seahawks games and such and we would like to continue that any way we can. It's just a matter of figuring out what we can do."

Seattle-area real estate mogul John Goodman jumped into the sport this winter with sponsorship of the team's second boat, which ran three races last year as the U-1918 Oberto Quality Meats. Grooms said Goodman is excited about the partnership with Miss Madison Racing.

"John is a great, great guy and we're excited about having them aboard," Grooms said. "John has a more philanthropic outlook for the boat and hopefully there is something that we can do to promote that."

"The important thing for us is to get our faces out there to not only help our sponsors but to help the sport as well," Grooms said. "Obviously we don't want the boats to sit in dry dock all summer."

Both boats have been maintained over the winter and are ready to hit the water. But like the old saying goes, right now they are all dressed up with nowhere to go.

"We're just like everybody else right now. We're not sure what the future is going to hold," Grooms said. "There are a lot of sports that are in the same situation. But hopefully we can do something in the near future."

Bedford's Coleman places 3rd in BGT event

BY COURIER STAFF REPORT

Gideon Coleman, a youth golfer from Bedford, Kentucky, tied for third in the Boys 15-18 grouping in the Bluegrass Golf Tour event at the Oxmoor Country Club on Tuesday.

Coleman, who is from Bedford but attends Providence Academy, shot a 10-over 82 to finish nine strokes behind the winner, Andrew Bennett of Louisville, who finished with a one-over 73. Evan Beery of LaGrange, Kentucky, was second with a 78 while Evan Pyle of Hopkinsville, Kentucky, tied Coleman for third.

Coleman previously competed in a BGT event in Fort Knox, Kentucky, on May 16-17. Coleman won the Combo Regional which was contested over two days, and placed third in the Saturday-only event and second in the Sunday-only event.

The BGT's next event will be the Combo Regional No. 1 in Calvert City, Kentucky, this weekend.

Unsel, Hall of Famer and NBA champion, dies at 74

BY HOWARD FENDRICH ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Wes Unsel was an undersized NBA center known more for his bruising picks, tenacious rebounding and perfectly placed outlet passes than any points he produced.

He thrived in his role as a workmanlike leader.

"I never played pretty," Unsel said when elected to the Hall of Fame in 1988. "I wasn't flashy. My contributions were in the things most people don't notice. They weren't in high scoring or dunking or behind-the-back passes."

Unsel, who began his pro career as a rookie MVP, led Washington to its only NBA championship and was chosen one of the 50 greatest players in league history, died Tuesday after "lengthy health battles, most recently with pneumonia," his family said in a statement released by the Wizards. He was 74.

He spent his entire 13-season playing career with the Bullets-Wizards franchise, then was its coach and general manager. The team was based in Baltimore when he was drafted; he and his wife, Connie, opened Unsel's School in that city in 1978.

"Wes Unsel was one of the most consequential players of his era," NBA Commissioner Adam Silver said. "His competitive drive and selfless approach made him a beloved teammate. ... Wes also set the model of class, integrity and professionalism for the entire NBA family during stints as a player, coach and team executive with Washington and through his dedication to expanding educational opportunities for children."

Unsel instantly made the team then known as the Baltimore Bullets into a winner after he was taken with the No. 2 overall pick — behind future teammate Elvin Hayes — in the 1968 draft.

A decade later, he was the MVP of the 1978 NBA Finals as the Bullets beat the Seattle SuperSonics in a seven-game series best known for Washington coach Dick Motta's proclamation: "The opera ain't over until the fat lady sings."

Listed at 6-foot-7 and 245 pounds, Unsel used power and savvy to outplay bigger opponents. He also brought his pro team something it never had experienced — and hasn't, really, since he stopped playing: true sustained success.

As a rookie, he averaged 13.8 points and 18.2 rebounds, while the team went 57-25, a 21-win improvement over the previous season and the franchise's first winning record. Unsel (1969) and Wilt Chamberlain (1960) are the only two players to win NBA Rookie of the Year and MVP honors in the same season.

The Bullets made the playoffs 12 consecutive times, reaching four NBA Finals. Unsel was an All-Star in his first four seasons and again in 1975.

"I know that night in and night out, the guy I play against will have more physical ability," Unsel once said, "but I feel like if I go out against a guy and play him 40 or 48 minutes a game or whatever, toe to toe, head to head, he is going to get tired or beat up or bored for two or three minutes. That will be enough to make sure he doesn't win the game for his team."

He was remembered Tuesday as "the gentlest of giants" by former Bullets player Rex Chapman, who was coached by Unsel in the 1990s, and as "a Legend and a Leader" by Cleveland Cavaliers forward Kevin Love, whose father, Stan, was a teammate of Unsel's on the Bullets in the 1970s. Love's middle name is Wesley in Unsel's honor.

Friends mourn ex-IU player slain during unrest

BY COREY WILLIAMS AND RICK CALLAHAN ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — To those who knew former Indiana University football player Chris Beaty, it was no surprise that he would participate in a protest over the death of George Floyd.

That a man they saw as a "gentle giant" who brought positivity everywhere he went would turn up dead in an alley after a peaceful demonstration turned violent was unfathomable.

"He promoted peace and understanding and love every way that he could," said Michael Cranfill, a restaurant and craft beer taproom owner. "He is someone, I think, who would take every opportunity he could to bring people together."

Beaty's body was found Saturday night not far from his apartment, one of two people fatally shot after violence erupted during an Indianapolis protest.

The death of the man who was known as Mr. Indianapolis because of his unwavering support and enthusiasm for the city was just one of several in the U.S. during a week of protest and unrest since Floyd died May 25 after a white Minneapolis officer pressed his knee into his neck for several minutes even after the handcuffed black man stopped moving and pleading for air. Others slain include a Louisville, Kentucky, restaurant owner who was shot by authorities trying to disperse a crowd; a federal officer in Oakland, California, who was shot at a courthouse by someone in a passing vehicle; and a man shot outside a pawn shop in Minneapolis.

Police in Indianapolis did not release details Tuesday of Beaty's slaying.

Arelly Elrod said she met Beaty about a decade ago through mutual friends who would attend local events together.

"He was so selfless and always so positive," said Elrod, who owns a cleaning service. "He felt like there was always a need in a time of hatred. He was always the one to make sure he made a difference."

Beaty, 38, graduated from Indianapolis Cathedral High School and played defensive lineman at Indiana University from 2000 to 2004.

Since then, he had become a business owner in Indianapolis.

"The news of the passing of Chris Beaty is just devastating," Indiana head football coach Tom Allen said in a statement. "Since I returned home to coach at Indiana, Chris embraced me, encouraged me and supported me! His passion for life and Indiana Football energized me every time we were together."

The school said Beaty had been president of Fresh Marketing LLC. A May 4 post on Beaty's Facebook page said that he and his team had created a reusable and washable cloth facemask with a filter for people to use during the coronavirus pandemic.

"As the realization that life is changing set in from sitting on the couch during quarantine, I figured out a way to be proactive and help people during these COVID-19 times," the post read. "If you're going back to work and looking for a solution to your 'new normal' please keep us in mind."

Beaty also owned and operated nightclubs and recently sold some of his businesses, said Cranfill, who added that when he opened his own restaurant in downtown Indianapolis Beaty asked how they could work together to grow the community.

"He was a gentle giant, the kind of guy that would just draw you in with his energy," said Cranfill, 37. "He had the most amazing smile, would give you a big hug. He exuded care for his community — someone who brought everyone together."

with multiple shoplifters daily as well as other crime. She was good at her job, once earning a regional Asset Protection Associate of the Year award.

Dziedzic earned her U.S. citizenship in the mid-2000s and her GED in 2012 and considered two options: joining the Navy or getting a college degree. She chose the latter, and in 2015 she graduated with three associates degrees in criminal justice, loss prevention and security from Elizabethtown Community and Technical College.

Dziedzic also completed the Kentucky State Police Citizen's Academy in 2012, having considered possibly going into law enforcement.

She recalls her four years taking college classes as a time when she "got no sleep" since she was working full-time, going to school and supporting her two children. That was around the time she met her current husband, Jeff, and the two were married on Feb. 14, 2014 — the same date of her parents' anniversary — in honor of her father, who had recently passed.

As for her current job in waste coordination? It all started with a pig.

A neighbor, Shaun Corley, stopped by she and her husband's house one day last summer and offered to take one of their red wattle heritage hogs to a meat processor in exchange for borrowing some equipment. Corley's wife, Leah, who works in the Trimble County Clerk's Office, was with her husband that day and later accompanied Dziedzic on a trip to the store. She mentioned to Dziedzic that the county's solid waste coordinator position was open and told her she thought she'd be perfect for the job.

"I said 'Me, really?'" Dziedzic said. "I didn't think I'd get it because I'm not from here."

But Dziedzic applied for the job, interviewed, and soon found out she was selected over more than 50 candidates.

Since then Dziedzic has made the countywide cleanup project her own.

In the first months, she uncovered at least eight large, makeshift dumps in backyards, hollows and creeks around the county. She also works with the operation at the Valley View Landfill at least three times a week, heads the county's dumpster program and was named zoning enforcement officer after Fiscal Court adopted zoning regulations in December. She's makes pickup runs nearly every day, regularly works Saturdays and is on-call any time she's needed.

As her job title suggests, the nature of the work isn't glamorous. One illegal dump site she found had been active and accumulating since 1971 and contained seven to eight tons of trash spanning at least two acres, she said. Other times she's found trash spilling into waterways, a dead deer that had been left for days in a swimming pool, a three-acre lot completely filled with garbage and burned waste and other nuisances that had gone unchecked for weeks, months or years. Earlier this spring she and the Trimble County Road Department cleaned up 75 tires dumped in the Providence area near Buck Creek Road and KY 316.

Some of the trash is not just unsightly but criminally dangerous like the "shake and bake" bottles — soda bottles filled with chemicals and a plastic tube used to make methamphetamine — found among other roadside garbage.

While confrontation might seem like a large part of her job, a lot of it comes down to how situations and people are handled. Dziedzic said most people comply when approached in the right way.

"You have to de-escalate, not escalate. People are defensive about their stuff and I don't blame them," Dziedzic said.

She recalled one instance where a resident called to complain about belongings in a neighbor's yard. After checking the situation, talking with the neighbor and hearing his side of the issue, Dziedzic learned he had been sick while still caring for several grandchildren and simply had a hard time maintaining his property. She helped him clean up the mess and took the trash with her in her county truck.

"People will try to get each other in trouble," she noted.

Another time, while responding to a complaint, Dziedzic learned that a man's wife had just left him and abandoned her clothes and belongings outside the house. She helped the man clean up the area and even donated the clothes to a local church clothes closet.

Getting to know the small Trimble County community and its people have been big pluses of the job, Dziedzic said.

Judge Executive Todd Pollock credited her work ethic and her demeanor with people as reasons Dziedzic has been so effective. Enforcement of waste pickup through the criminal court system is now seen as a last resort as opposed to "just talking to people" to reach an understanding, Pollock said. He said he was shocked to see the scale of the illegal dumps she was reporting.

Dziedzic said she's also gotten around to teaching a few words of German to Pollock and other county employees.

"I can't say enough good," Pollock said. "She came into the job with a sense of urgency to get this county cleaned up."

Geris is not the best

Dear Annie: I work with a woman who, for some reason, is absolutely desperate to hoard all the work, all day, every day. “Geri” answers the phone on a half a ring. If something comes out of the fax, then she will run to get it before anyone else can. If she does not get her way, then she will cry and tell the boss that you are mistreating her. She has one of the brownest noses I have ever seen. At this point, I believe that she has become a human suppository to my boss. She has absolutely no idea how to share and gets very upset when you treat her the same way she treats you. Geri has been nasty to me since Day One. When I’ve told her I don’t appreciate the way she treats me, she tells me that I’d better get used to it. “Quantity, not quality” must be her personal motto. She will, on occasion, share work that comes out of the fax with everyone else in the room except myself (but only after she’s bitten off more than she can chew). She has told me that the reason I don’t like her is that she has “a work ethic.” I would beg to differ. It seems more along the lines of a personality disorder and/or extreme arrogance. I work with quite a few other people who have healthy work ethics. We get along just fine. She also doesn’t believe that she can ever make a mistake. If she does and you catch it, she will instantly blame someone else or say, “What’s the big deal?” She even has made flyers saying that “Geri is the best!” and “Geri is a NICE PERSON!” I can’t wait till she passes them out! I am at the end of my rope. I’d hate to quit because the days that she doesn’t show up are pretty darn good. We laugh; we work; and, get this, we share. The only time she is kind is when she wants something from you, whether it be knowledge or for you to pick her up some food or perhaps complete a task that she feels is beneath her. Please offer me some guidance. — Enough Is Enough Dear Enough: In my years writing this column

I’ve heard of all sorts of behavior, but someone making “I’m Great!” flyers — that is a first. Clearly, Geri has some issues that didn’t begin with you, and they won’t end with you. Acknowledging that might help you find some measure of peace with the situation. That’s not to say you should put up with workplace bullying. The first step toward addressing that is talking to Geri again. Ask what you could do that might make your working relationship smoother. Let her know how her behavior impacts you. Don’t rattle off a laundry list of all her transgressions. Focus instead on the overarching pattern of her taking on so much of the workload. If this peace talk doesn’t bear out results, it’s time to go up the chain of command. Request to meet with human resources (and if there is no HR, then your supervisor). Go into the meeting seeking solutions, not pointing fingers. And again, leave out all the personal animosity you may feel toward Geri. Present only the ways in which her behavior has concretely impacted your work. Whatever happens, try to disengage from her antics as much as possible. “The Geri Show” may go on, but you don’t have to tune in.

I'm so embarrassed

Dear Annie: What do you do about embarrassing memories that pop into your head randomly and make you want to crawl in a hole?

It seems to keep happening to me lately. I'll be washing my hair in the shower, or trying to drift off to sleep at night, when, suddenly, I remember a humiliating event from my past and feel a flush of heat through my whole body. This is especially a problem when I'm trying to sleep since it sends adrenaline rushing through me and keeps me awake for an hour or more.

I don't know if there's anything I can do about this. I guess I just needed to get this off my chest and share it with someone. I'm also curious to know if anyone else has experienced this. Am I crazy? — Mortified

Dear Mortified: No, you're not crazy, and you're not alone. To err is human; to dwell on the error, especially so. Everyone experiences these "cringe attacks" from time to time. It can help to let the memory come up, rather than trying to suppress it. What we resist persists. A 2015 study found that focusing on other details of such memories — such as what the room looked like or who you were with — can gradually reduce the emotional effect they have on you. (Melissa Dahl discusses this study in her book "Cringeworthy: A Theory of Awkwardness," which is definitely worth a read.)

Still, if you notice that these thoughts are becoming more frequent and interrupting your daily life, consider seeing a therapist for guidance in managing anxiety.

Dear Annie: Recently, I turned 65. I'm a retired Navy pilot and author who has had multiple near-death experiences over the course of a very lucky and unlucky life (including plane and car crashes and terminal cancer caused by excessive exposure to radiation). I'm forever grateful for — and truly blessed to have — a wonderful wife and family and friends.

I've always been a huge nature lover, and that's why I learned to fly. I wanted to fly like a bird, high above the earth, enjoying and at peace with Mother Nature.

In essence, Annie, this is what I've learned about life through the years: We're not conquerors of Mother Earth or the universe. We're too small, and the universe is too big. We're too finite, and the Universe is too infinite. Instead, we're merely temporary children — children who'll sometimes think we're in charge but never are really.

In the mere blink of an eye, we'll all be gone. Eternity does matter, and love does matter. I can't tell you exactly how or why, but — after what I've been through — I know in my heart, mind and soul that it does.

So, try to live a joyful and meaningful life with your family, friends and community. Please, just try ... you'll be forever glad you did. — Bill Goss, LCDR USN (Ret)

Dear Bill: Your letter touched my heart. Love is truly all that matters in the end. Everything else falls away. Thank you for sharing your wisdom, and I wish you and your family all the best.
